NEW INTERNS AT CPMRD

NAILA SALIHU joined the KAIPTC, as a graduate intern with the CPMRD in October 2008 and will be with the Center till the end of March 2009. Naila’s research is focused on the role of women in post conflict societies in Africa. She is interested in issues of governance, elections and electoral conflicts in Africa. Naila also has a special interest in gender, peace and security issues.

Camille Muhire is a GTZ-sponsored intern at the Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution Department (CPMRD) of KAIPTC. She joined the KAIPTC in October 2008 and will be with the Center till the end of March 2009. Naila’s research is focused on the role of the media in conflict prevention, management and resolution in Africa.

Camille holds a Bachelor of Arts degree in International Relations from the University of Yaoundé for her master’s degree in Conflict Security and Development at the University of Ghana. She has a special interest in issues of community crime and violence in Ghana.

MARGARET AKPENE ATIPOE is a graduate student in Information Studies and Linguistics from the University of Ghana, Legon. She is a national service personel at KAIPTC with CPMRD for the period between November 2008 and August 2009. Margaret is interested in understanding peace building processes and negotiations in post-conflict societies in Africa. She also wishes to sharpen her research skills in issues of community crime and security.

While at KAIPTC, she intends to enhance her skills and expertise in research through personal contribution to CPMRD publications. This she hopes to achieve by writing an occasional paper focusing on community crime and violence using Ghana as a case study. Margaret’s expectations include an opportunity to pursue higher academic studies in the area of gender, peace support operations, conflict, security and development.

JIMAM TIMCHANG LAR attended the University of Jos, Nigeria (1998-2001) graduating with a BA (Hons.) Degree in History and an MA from the same institution in March 2007. Jimam is a merit beneficiary of the ECOWAS/CDSD MA Fellowship programme at King’s College in the United Kingdom. He was in the War Studies Department of King’s College pursuing an MA in Conflict Security and Development. Before arriving at King’s College, Jimam was an Assistant Lecturer in the Department of History and International Studies at the University of Jos, Nigeria.

Jimam’s research interests include: intra/inter group relations in post-colonial Central Nigeria; security sector reform and conflict prevention in West Africa with special focus in democratic governance: local ownership and policy coherence; the dynamics of boundaries, sovereignty and sub-regional integration in West Africa. He is also interested in activities of non-state security actors in Nigeria, and local versus foreign processes of transitional justice. At KAIPTC, Jimam will focus his research on ECOWAS and its regional SSR agenda.

CPMRD VISIT ECOWAS

AS PART OF KAIPTC’s COLLABORATION with ECOWAS, researchers from the CPMRD have been actively seeking ways to support the research capacity of ECOWAS as well as making contacts easier for researchers from across the region to conduct research on peace and security-related issues. In line with this, the CPMRD undertook a field research to the ECOWAS Commission to gather all relevant materials on peace and security in the region. The aim is to publish all the peace and security protocols, declarations, conventions and peace agreements in a form of legislation compendium. The first part of the compendium is expected to be published in early 2009.

PERSONS OF NOTE

The lecture brought together opinion leaders and representatives of civil society drawn from the public, diplomatic missions in Ghana, governance think tanks and security agencies.

Truth Commissions and Peacebuilding in Africa

The lecture series was organized in collaboration with the Friedrich Ebert Stiftung (FES), organized a lecture on the topic “Truth Commissions and Post-Conflict Peacebuilding in Africa” at the KAIPTC on Thursday, 20 November 2008. The lecture was the second in a series of CPMRD’s Reflections in Security Series for the year 2008 delivered by Mr Franklin Odoro, of the Centre for Democratic Development (CDD), Ghana. The presentation was structured on the following themes: Origins of Truth and Reconciliation Commissions (TRC), Debates and Issues Surrounding the Subject, Relationship with Peacebuilding, and Critical Weaknesses of TRCs as a tool of Peace building in Africa.

The exercise which was aimed at monitoring the electoral security in the December 2008 general elections in Ghana began with a baseline study which was conducted by a team of researchers at CPMRD to map out twenty-five (25) key constituencies which exhibit high volatility potential to violence during elections in Ghana. These constituencies were selected based on a set of criteria characterized by: prevailing security realities; nature of electoral competitiveness and some other underlying factors which may compromise the conduct of peaceful elections in Ghana.

Subsequent to the study, 25 electoral security observers were recruited, trained and deployed in the constituencies in order to monitor and report on the security and violence aspects of the electoral process in the selected areas.

CPMRD reviews the findings of the observers’ field reports which are then shared with the wider general public including the development partners, foreign election observers and the press at different stakeholders’ forums in Accra.

The next report which is scheduled to be released in January, 2009 will review the voting-day electoral activities and the aftermath events following the release of the election results in the selected constituencies.

Since the beginning of the exercise, three reports have been released by CODEO covering the respective months of October, November and December, 2008.

In line with this collaborative exercise, CDD and CODEO have set up an Election Observation Centre at the KAIPTC to tabulate the electoral results from CODEO field observers deployed in all the polling stations in Ghana. The parallel election collation centre at KAIPTC is schedule to be operational from 30 November to 15 December, 2008.

Small Arms and Light Weapons Programme

SINCE MARCH, 2008, CPMRD HAS BEEN DIRECTLY involved in the on-going regional agenda to combat the proliferation of small arms and light weapons in West Africa. In support of this commitment, a three-year rolling programme has been instituted with financial and technical support from the Government of Japan to complement the ECOVAS Commission’s Small Arms and Light Weapons Control Programmes in West Africa.

The project is designed to strengthen the capacity of national commissions for small arms in West Africa. The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) is the liaison agency for the project while KAIPTC leads in the design and delivery of the courses.

IN MAY, 2008, A Project Co-ordinator was assigned to the CPMRD to manage the project over the three year period. This was followed by a brainstorming session which culminated in the design of training kits which was tested at a pilot training in November 2008. Within the pilot phase, a working group and a steering group have been set up to oversee the implementation of the project at the technical and strategic levels respectively.

The November pilot course attracted participants from 13 out of the 15 ECOVAS member-states many of whom expressed satisfaction at the conduct of the training. In 2009, up to 5 training courses will be organised with a view to widening the target audience.

KAIPTC JOINT ACTIVITIES WITH PARTNERS

The 7th session of the West Africa Peacebuilding Institute (WAPI) was held in September, 2008 at KAIPTC. The peacebuilding training programme was organized by the West Africa Network for Peacebuilding (WANEP) in collaboration with KAIPTC and the German Development Cooperation (GTZ). Two KAIPTC staff development trainings on Equality & Diversity and Problem Based Learning (PBL/Tot) for course directors and external facilitators took place at the Centre in October and November, 2008. The Centre will publish a Problem Based Learning (PBL) handbook for future use at the Centre.

In October, 2008, KAIPTC hosted the Training of Trainers (TOT) workshop on conflict prevention together with West Africa Civil Society Institute (WASCI) and GTZ. The workshop tested a conflict prevention training manual which will be published in due course.

In October, 2008, GTZ conducted a progress review exercise at KAIPTC. The outcome of the exercise resulted in the endorsement of the expansion of the GTZ technical support programme at KAIPTC for the next three years.

During a workshop in November, 2008, KAIPTC in collaboration with the United Nations Department for Peacekeeping Operations (UNPKO) and GTZ, explored the possibilities of designing an advanced DDR training course at the KAIPTC.

Democratic Transition and Electoral Security in Ghana

By
Ernest Ansah Lartey

One of the ways through which the success of a democratic transition can be measured is how regularly political power is peacefully transferred from one political party to another in a political contest. In this case, political parties who compete with each other in a democratic election should be given equal opportunity to conduct their campaigns in a secure political environment. On the other hand, a democratic transition which is characterised by abuse of incumbency and violence cannot be considered to be a success, even though political power may have been changed through the ballot box. In Ghana, the Fourth Republican Constitution of 1992 makes provision for a smooth alternation of political power between political parties through free and fair elections supervised by an independent electoral commission. The Constitution, also, provides ample guidelines that direct the conduct of the security agencies in promoting democracy in Ghana. This makes the Fourth Republican Constitution an exhaustive and supreme security framework which legitimizes the existence of, not only the state and the elective government, but also the security of the entire citizenry.

Since Ghana reclaimed its democratic status in 1992, the role of the security agencies in consolidating the democratic process has been extremely commendable. In the first instance, the security agencies played an instrumental role in the democratic elections that peacefully transferred political power from a military regime to a civilian government in 1992. Secondly and more significantly is the catalytic role which the security agencies played in the 2000 elections in which the incumbent democratic government, in compliance with the Constitution, handed over power peacefully to the opposition party following the outcome of the 2000 elections which went in favour of the opposition party. These two events are landmark achievements that have been largely acclaimed by the international community.

Previous elections have been keenly contested between the two major political parties, the New Patriotic Party (NPP) and National Democratic Congress (NDC), and this year’s elections on December 7, 2008 promise to be even more competitive with a possibility of run-off. Certainly, another change of political administration is due to emerge from this year’s elections but even with less than a week to the ballot, no clear leader has emerged from the current political race even though various opinion polls conducted by institutions such as the “Daily Dispatch” newspaper, National Commission for Civil Education (NCCE), the “Dankwah” Institute and the Bureau of National Investigations (BNI) have all predicted controversial outcomes with varying degree of credibility.

Also, the electoral process in Ghana has been needlessly characterized by abuse of incumbency, intolerable levels of violence and inconceivable degree of impunity which keep aggravating each time elections are held in the country. What is more instructive is the way and manner the security agencies, especially the police have managed the security of the elections. There is a deep-seated perception of institutional complicity with incumbent governments in manipulating electoral processes and outcomes in the country. This perception is strongly held by the main opposition NDC which has variously accused the security agencies of uneven handedness. The police administration, on the other hand, has made public their commitment to exercise their constitutional mandate to all parties in an impartial manner and has urged the political parties to be circumspect in their utterances in order not to incite people to violence.

To provide maximum security for the 2008 elections a National Elections Security Task Force (NESTF) has been established. As the lead agency of NESTF, the police administration needs to inspire and exhibit high sense of professionalism and capacity in order to provide the desired operational level security capable of dealing swiftly with electoral malfeasance, threats and actual acts of violence which may undermine the peaceful conduct of the December 7 elections. As the days get closer to the elections, the security agencies must ensure that they uphold the highest standards of best practices reflective of the principles of fairness, firmness and due diligence in the discharge of their election security duties.

Towards this regard, it is highly recommended that there be established a permanent national elections security management board led by the Ghana Police Service which will be charged exclusively with the responsibility of dealing with election security matters in the country irrespective of the electoral season of the national political calendar. The proposed Elections Security Management Board (ESMB) should be decentralized to the regional, district and constituency levels across the country in order to be able to give rapid response to violations of electoral rules. This will help stem the intolerable levels of electoral violence and the culture of impunity that appear to be gaining ascendancy in the Ghanaian body politics. It will also help to promote a culture of peace, tolerance and rule of law, especially at the grassroots level in Ghana. The entry point to start the formation of the proposed ESMB will be to transform part of the current ad hoc NESTF into a more professional elections security unit, and empowering it with exclusive mandate to handle elections security violations.

But beyond this, the optimum security for elections in Ghana remains a collective responsibility that must be nurtured through a predictable security governance system in which all stakeholders have a role to play.
